CHAPTER XII. (Continued.)

"No," declared one stockholder, lucky. jumping up, "I won't do any such thing."

"Then you may do as you wish," repiled Seagrue, softly, "but I am through with the Superstition mine." The heated discussion continued. Almost every one in the room took sides against Seagrue, Finally, at bay himself, and realizing the trouble the minority stockholders could put him to, he made a further concillatory proposal. "As we cannot agree," he said, "I am willing to buy your shares in the mine at their par value." This seemed to pour a little oil upon the troubled waters. After some further wranging, details were actually arraigned then and there for the transfer of the minority shares, and the meeting closed in a better feeling than it had opened.

than it had opened.

At the mine, Helen and George Storm were talking together when the foreman joined them. Helen asked im about the work.

"If you'll come this way," he suggested, "I'll show you exactly where were going to drill to-day."

A messenger handed Helen a despatch. It was from Rhinelander announcing the completion of the transfer and advising her he would arrive fer and advising her he would arrive on No. 8.
"First, we'll go down and meet Mr.

Rhinelander," said Storm to the fore-man. "When we come back we'll see man. "When we come back we'll see where you're working."

Rhinelander returned well pleased with the result of his trip. He explained to Helen and Storm the particulars of the transfer, showing them the agreement as he did so, and Helen told him about the incident of the stolen quartz.

They walked over to the gether and entered it. While they were talking a man came to Mr. Hhinelander, saying that the foreman had asked to see him. Accompanied by Helen and Storm, Rhinelander walked down the tunnel to where the men were working.

men were working.

The foreman turned from his work "How are things looking?" demanded Rhinelander. "Why, to tell the truth," answered

"We had trouble with this vein once or twice before," began the foreman, TRENCH MUSICIANS at 8,15 F.M. guardedly, "but it didn't turn out very serious. This time it looks as if the veln had pinched out on us. Just come over this way."

Rhinelander stood as if rooted to the ground, looking significantly the while from Helen to Storm. "Helen," he said quizzically, "what does that sound like to you?"

Helen looked at him evenly. sounds," she replied, "very much like Mr. Earl Seagrue."

Mr. Earl Seagrue."
"What do you think, George?" demanded Rhinelander.
Storm shook his head. "It may be,"
he admitted, "that he's slipped one over on you."
Ithinelander seemed not seriously disturbed. "It wouldn't be the first disturbed. "It wouldn't be the first time, if he had," he observed quietly. "But I'm going to have a look into this thing, and if that vein is really gone, I'll know why before I get through with the subject." Followed by his companions, he joined the foreman. They examined the rock in turn and held a long discussion. The foreman suggested calling an expert.

"No," said Rhinelander, stubbornly; A laxative today saves a sick child temorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour.

"I just bought this mine on the recommendation of an expert; all I want is a little hard-headed, common sense here, and I am going to have it. The best authorities in the mining world told General Holmes he mining so these mountains lasted."

"But Seagrue must have known all this," interposed Helen.

"He thought it time to unload, be-yond a doubt," answered Rhinelander. "Helen," he exclaimed, "I know Sca-grue better than you do. I know how full his head is of schemes and all that. But I want to tell you it is a fact that Earl Scagrue is a quitter.

He gives up too quick and starts a new scheme. Now, I am not going to quit on the Superstition mine until I've made a thorough investigation of this trouble. I am not a miner, he said speaking to the foreman, "I'm just a plain, everyday railroad man. But I've heard that things can be done even when a vein pinches out. Now, you get busy," he said to the listening foreman, "and tell me, new and here, what's the first thing to do to try to pick this vein up again."

"You might pick it up," responded the foreman, "for a song, if you're lucky. It all depends. You might spend a million dollars and never pick it up."

cut through there and we might pick up the vein."

Rhineslander asked further questions: the hard-headed miner seemed to have, he thought, some good ideas.

"All right," said Rhimelander, at length, "cross-cat right there, just as you say. We'll see how we come out. If we get beat we'll try something else.

Under the impetus of new hope the work went rapidly forward. Every man in the mine took courage. So long as there was a possibility of doing anything they were glad to work to save their own jobs. The crew at hand went vigorously to work under the foreman's directions. In a short time a hole had been primed for a biast, the fuse lighted and the men rushed out. The explosion followed and they went back.
